

Expand your future potential by enrolling today.

Logistics and Supply Chain Management are quickly becoming the business world's most highly sought-after skill set. Whether a student plans to continue a career in the military or pursue a future civilian occupation, a master's degree in this field is highly desirable.

The MSB-SCM program was launched in the fall 2008 semester. The course format is similar to an executive graduate program.

MSB - SUPPLY CHAIN MANAGEMENT

A degree program sanctioned by the U.S. Army Logistics Management College

GET THE EDGE YOU NEED TO ADVANCE YOUR CAREER

The KU School of Business, in conjunction with the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College (CGSC) at Fort Leavenworth, is pleased to offer officers the opportunity to expand their future potential with a new specialized graduate degree in Supply Chain Management and Logistics.

The Master of Science in Business with a Supply Chain Management and Logistics concentration is aimed specifically toward Army majors and major-eligible captains. The degree will complement the quality military supply chain education officers enjoy while enabling a broader, civilian economic focus for those who plan to pursue logistics careers after military service. This specialized degree will prove valuable for seeking greater responsibilities within the Army and competing for significant positions later in a business career.

The U.S. Army Logistics Management College has accepted and sanctioned this program into the National Logistics Curriculum. The MSB Supply Chain Management degree is 30 credit hours, with 24 credits from the KU School of Business and 6 credits from the CGSC at Fort Leavenworth.

MSB Supply Chain Management classes are taught by KU Business faculty at the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College (CGSC) at Fort Leavenworth.
